9. Steady-state economics: a new paradigm. Herman E. Daly. Article
New Literary History. 24.4 (Autumn 1993) p811. Word Count: 1668.

A new paradigmatic approach to economics involving the relationship between state and global economies and the world ecosystem is needed. The currently used Keynesian model assumes economics to be totally separate from ...

10. Memory and the narrative imperative: St. Augustine and Samuel Beckett. James Olney. Article
New Literary History. 24.4 (Autumn 1993) p857. Word Count: 11451.

St. Augustine and Samuel Beckett each struggled to explain people's desire to address and re-address the past in some sort of narrative form. Both men recognized the futility of such an excercise but continued to ...

11. Environment, environmentalists, and global change: a skeptic's evaluation. Reid A. Bryson. Article
New Literary History. 24.4 (Autumn 1993) p783. Word Count: 4963.

Environmental studies are necessarily interdisciplinary but the history of the environmental movement reveals a lack of true understanding of how the topic should be approached. Interdisciplinary does not mean having a ...

12. Bathsheba or the interior Bible. Helene Cixous and Catherine A.F. MacGillivray. Article
New Literary History. 24.4 (Autumn 1993) p817. Word Count: 1083.

Rembrandt's painting 'Bathsheba' is discussed as it relates to nudes in general, the David and Bathsheba myth, psychoanalysis, use of color and the artist's use of omission to invoke ideas. The painting is also compared ...
