1. Achieved. We have only co-requisite 1060s on the fall schedule and will maintain this practice moving forward.	1. Fall 2017 and ongoing.	1. Create a dedicated English computer classroom for English 106 classes. The space has been designated, but the computers that were supposed to be handed down from GIS were deemed “undeployable.” Sustaining this initiative requires hiring a replacement for Dr. Jason McIntosh, composition director, who left in spring 2019.	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> - Implementing the English computer classroom - Hiring a new assistant/associate professor - Scheduling classes to avoid overlap 	1. Yes. We will now have to find money for the computers and maintain the budget line for a comp director.
2. Achieved and ongoing.	2. Fall 2017 and ongoing.	2. In order to attract incoming students to our own major, we should offer at least 1 LC in fall of 2019 and onward that pairs composition classes with literature, creative writing, linguistics, or literacy classes.	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> - Faculty departures and sabbaticals require the department to staff essential classes first - Staffing LCs pulls faculty away from teaching other classes 	2. Yes. We need to staff these courses and the other English courses because so many of our faculty are teaching in LCs.
3. Ongoing.	3. FY 21	3. We had several students graduate last spring, but the number of new students coming into the major remains steady. We are working on recruitment material and programming (such as Geek Week) to attract more English majors.	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> - It is difficult to recruit for our graduate program given that other graduate programs in English offer stipends that are twice as large as ours. 	3. Yes. We need larger stipends and recruitment support for the MA program from the SEM office.
